Conserving Historic Vessels is a richly illustrated, 200 page guidance publication, produced with funding support from the Headley Trust and the Society for Nautical Research and is an invaluable resource for all those with an interest in maritime heritage. It is designed to explain the key principles behind conservation, helping specialists and non specialists alike develop an understanding of their project, its significance and the most appropriate conservation route to adopt in each circumstance. A series of case studies throughout offers examples from which to draw and the book is further supported by an online bibliography and regularly updated resource section with downloadable technical papers, freely available from the National Historic Ships' website.

This book is the culmination of extensive research and a widespread consultation exercise carried out amongst key groups and individuals across the sector. Conserving Historic Vessels is intended as the base manual for vessel owners, heritage organisations and maritime associations both at home and abroad. It sets down the principles and thought processes increasingly sought in all vessel grant applications received by funding bodies such as the Heritage Lottery Fund and is also now used as a core text by a number of specialist maritime training schemes across the UK.
